THE CHICAGO FLURRY.

The run on the Chicago savings banks is over, and the only persons who have lost by it are the depositors who have forfeited their half-year's interest by withdrawing their money before the first of July. In other respects, the flurry had a good effect. It has showed that the banks were and are perfectly solvent and worthy of confidence, and this is worth a great deal. It has been an object lesson to depositors all over the country, and lessened the probability of further runs on banks outside of Chicago.

The general situation is not such as ought to make public confidence in conservative financial institutions. Money for speculative purposes is certainly not easy to get, but that only shows that the banks are careful and prudent in their management. Prices are low, goods are attractive, as our well filled advertising columns show. The passenger traffic of our railways is very large, and hotels are doing a good business. In fact, there is reason to believe that the present stringency has about reached its closest, and that in a short time things will be much easier in the financial world.

TOO SOON FOR 1896.

There are always some people who try to force the season, politically, and endeavor to prophesy, or at least to guess, immediately after one national campaign whether who will be the standard bearers in the next. Thus we were told by some wiseacres, immediately after last fall's election, that 1892 would see the same candidates in nomination again, that the "logic of events" pointed irresistibly to the renomination of Harrison by the Republicans, and of Cleveland by the Democrats. Now we are told that the renomination of Governor McKinley in Ohio, to be followed by his triumphant re election this fall, will make him an almost irresistible candidate for the Republican Presidential nomination three years hence.

It may be, of course, that either Benjamin Harrison or William McKinley will be the choice of the Republican national convention of 1896. Both are good men. Events may perhaps turn out so that one of them might be the strongest candidate that could be presented. But three years is a long time to look forward, and events may so shape themselves that neither Harrison nor McKinley will be the best candidate in 1896.

It is all right to begin to organize now for the next campaign. The Republican National Committee has done well in deciding to open permanent headquarters in New York, with a capable man in charge, as Secretary. But it does no good to begin the "booming" of particular candidates so long beforehand. When the present confusion shall have cleared away, when the Fifty-third Congress shall have made its record, when we know more fully just the issues on which the political battle of 1896 will be joined; then we can tell better which of the many strong and safe leaders of the party ought to be put forward as its candidate for the Presidency.

As for the Democrats, if present indications are any guide to the future, they will be floundering in chaos in about two years, and he is a prophet indeed who can predict with any approach to present credibility "where they will be at" in 1896, or who by that time will be regarded as their strongest candidate.

RAINOKA'S SPEECH.

At first sight it seems a very strange thing that a speech so entirely pacific in tone as that of the Austro-Hungarian Premier should have caused such widespread dissatisfaction and even alarm. From the strictly German or perhaps we might better say Teutonic point of view, however, the emphasis which Count Kalnoky put upon the better understanding which had been reached with Russia was certainly not altogether reassuring. The Dreibund, or Triple Alliance of Germany, Austria and Italy, is based on political expediency alone. Neither Austrians nor Germans trust each other implicitly. Each of the allies keeps a jealous and considerate watch upon the others lest some slight stretch of the bonds of the alliance be made outside of the Dreibund which will be paramount to that bond.

What effect this pacific speech may have upon the German Army bill, and upon the elections to the Reichstag next week, remains to be seen. The opponents of the bill assert jubilantly that Count Kalnoky's peaceful tone does away with all excuse for a present large increase of the standing army; the friends of the bill are just as sure that the friendliness of Austria with Russia makes it more than ever necessary that Germany should prepare to take care of herself in any emergency.

Happily all these things interest us only as questions. The maintenance of an exact balance of power in Europe is a matter of vital concern for the peace of humanity, however, let us hope that peace will prevail, and that the day may soon come when the staggering armies of Europe will no longer be a terrible burden.

The amendments to the Home Rule bill which were adopted on Wednesday divided the Gladstonian forces, no less than 130 Home Rulers voting against an amendment for which the Prime Minister made a special personal appeal. The Conservatives and Unionists are a unit in the fine generalship at this stage of the debate, and there is no telling how long even Mr. Gladstone can hold solidly together the remarkably heterogeneous forces of which his following is now composed.

The Press Club is in Chicago and rates for everything has gone up. Even the [illegible] charge 50 cents for [illegible] drinks in the saloon below.

The Death of Mr. Bell.

From a Friend of The Gazette.

A friend has sent me a copy of some papers of the late Alexander Graham Bell, including a Dramatic Sketch, also offers an autograph letter of the late Mr. A. W. Bell which occurred on the 2nd of March. The dramatic sketch seems to be supposed to stop at his death therefore it would be impossible to add the last act as the issue for lovers and then terminate. This sketch and all others that I have been connected with are open all night and have been running for years in many parts of the world and to turn it out at the motor which is located to light the city. Closets, etc., and right to make [illegible] and according [illegible] such hotels as the [illegible] kindly allow her to change her lifestyle of her life and stop at such hotels that are open all night. No one is more sorry of the news concerning the death of Mr. Bell than I, but her husband and two daughters, who were with him, will bear my last [illegible] that no blame in any way is attached to the Louisiana hotel or any one connected with it. His daughter was in his room at 1 a. m. and says no gas was in the room at that time and says no gas was in the room at that time and [illegible] discovered gas escaping from the room the transom being open the gas [illegible] was [illegible] and when we struck a match to it it burned fully two inches. It must have been up after his daughter had been in his room and either let the gas or seen in his room and failed to turn the stop cock was going to and failed to turn the stop cock of course. Respectfully yours,

J. M. SELLERS,
Manager of the Louisiana Hotel.

KINDERGARTEN NORMAL SCHOOL

Where Students May Learn the Methods of Froebel.

The Kindergarten Normal School of Colorado was established in 1889 by the Denver Kindergarten Association, which is composed of about 200 Denver women who are banded together to promote kindergarten education in Colorado. The association represents a large body of wealth and influence and the incorporation of the kindergarten into our public school system by the last General Assembly is an evidence of that influence. The training of kindergarten teachers upon a high educational basis has widely been considered by the cultured and public spirited women of that body their most important work. The character of the advisory board of their normal school will have significance with the educational people of this State. It is composed of the following gentlemen: President Baker, University of Colorado; President Ellis, State Agricultural college; President Snyder, State Normal school; Chancellor McDowell, University of Denver; President Slocum, Colorado College.

Students taking the normal course are required to be in constant attendance on class days and to attend regularly some appointed kindergarten, where, under the supervision of a competent director and the normal faculty of practical work with children.

The first year or junior course includes the study of Froebel's Mutter and Kose Lieder, gift and occupation work, physical culture, vocal music, drawing, practice of games and clay modeling. Students completing this course will receive a junior certificate.

To enter the normal course one must be [illegible] years of age, and must present evidence of sufficient scholarship to enable them to pursue the studies required. Graduates of high schools or academies are preferred, or University course are preferred.

The second year or senior course includes advanced gift work, occupation and recreative work, physical culture, reading, music, psychology and philosophy of childhood. Students completing it satisfactorily will be given additional diplomas and considered ready to take positions as directors of kindergartens.

The post-graduate or normal course includes higher studies for kindergartners, also instruction in giving work to classes, and gives an opportunity to supervise and guide the work of others, thus testing the ability to impart kindergarten principles and methods. Students completing it will be given a post-graduate degree. No student will be admitted to this course who has not had two years of practical experience and training.

The literary committee in charge of the normal school is composed of Mrs. William [illegible], Mrs. [illegible] Dawson, Mrs. Charles [illegible], Miss [illegible], Miss [illegible] Dawson, Mrs. Charles [illegible], Miss [illegible] and Miss [illegible] Dawson.

The principal of the normal school, Miss Kerrie Johnson, is supported by a strong faculty of instructors.

Classes begin in September and January. Students may not be admitted after classes are organized.

For additional particulars about the normal school, or for information about starting kindergartens, securing competent teachers, etc., address Mrs. N. P. Hill, president of the Free Kindergarten association, 361 Fourteenth street, Denver.

RUSSIA AND ENGLAND.

Why We Feel Justified in Doing More For the Latter than For the Latter.

The London Chronicle, discussing the treaty between the United States and Russia, wants to know why in the matter of the expedition of assistance we concede to Russia what we have refused to England. The New York Sun accepts the Chronicle's challenge and makes the following reply:

We can indicate some special grounds on which we might be strongly inclined to grant privileges to Russia for which England vainly appeals in vain. It was always closed by the hostile temper of her newspapers at the time of our demand for an apology and an indemnity from Chili for the murder of Mr. Egan, an American citizen. It is still our cordial friend of the United States. No [illegible] of bloodshed exists, it seems only to exacerbate her jealousy. Not only is that part of its population which is of Irish lineage, but in that still larger and most influential element which traces its descent to the stock which created the Democratic party, there is no more cordial friendship for England than that of resentment toward England.

To Russia, on the other hand, we are bound by the strongest ties of gratitude and friendship. When we say Russia, we mean not only or mainly the Russian people, but the house of Romanoff, which governs the Russian people. Never since the beginning of our national life have we suffered an injury at the hands of that dynasty, and we are indebted to it for [illegible] services. When, even after Yorktown, George III clung to his determination to [illegible] the Declaration of Independence, Catherine II joined the League of neutrals, which subjected the British ministers to a pressure which they could not resist. At another time, England, [illegible] Napoleon by his Milan and Berlin decrees, declared a paper blockade of the European coast, [illegible] American commerce, our vessels were [illegible] by the English cruisers, [illegible] Alexander I. refused to [illegible] the combatants. At the crisis of our national existence, when the Union seemed split in twain and Napoleon III proposed to England to give us a death blow by a joint intervention—a proposal passionately favored by the Imperialistic and plutocratic classes—both the autocrat Alexander II. interposed his veto, and his intentions were signified by the dispatch of a Russian fleet to the harbors of New York [illegible]. Finally, while England had done her best to deprive us of Oregon, Russia ceded to us Alaska at a price ridiculously small if compared with the profit of the seal industry alone.

Does the London Chronicle wonder why the great body of our people feel disposed to do for Russia what they would decline to do for England. When the Radicals, whom the Chronicle represents, make themselves the real masters of Great Britain, when they have hunted the aristocrats out of every nook and cranny of the administration and have revived the principles of the Commonwealth and the Protectorate, when Englishmen and Americans will [illegible] with very different feelings upon their [illegible] kinsmen. But not before.

[illegible] over a year ago I had a severe fever, and when I recovered, my hair began to fall out, and what little remained [illegible] I used various remedies to [illegible] without success. Colorado College.

The Scientific Society has recently received copies of three foreign reviews containing extended notices of Dr. Mustard's article on "The Etymologies in the Servian Commentary to Virgil," which was published in Vol. III of "Colorado College Studies." The three magazines are the "Wochenschrift for Klassische Philologie," November 2, 1892, Berlin; the "Revue Critique d'Histoire et de Litterature," September 26, Paris; and "The Classical Review," April, 1893, London and New York. The attention which the articles of the "Studies" have attracted in the scholarly world seems to increase more widely every day, proving more and more how high a standard of learning our faculty is making for Colorado College.

Avoiding the Chicago Crowd.

Many travelers from the West to New York and other Eastern points have already seen the Exposition, or have planned to visit it on their return. They would be going and returning as they are now entering and leaving Chicago by all lines. This can be done very readily and without any sacrifice of comfort by going via St. Louis and the Pennsylvania lines. The "Pennsylvania Special" leaving St. Louis daily at 5:10 p. m., over the Vandalia and Pennsylvania route is an exact counterpart of the famous "Keystone Express" from Chicago, and will land you at Baltimore,

COLORADO COLLEGE.

Miss Ethel Gandy has received the highest marks for scholarship of the graduating academy class, and she is consequently valedictorian. Mr. Milton Roberts comes second, and Miss Mildred Foster the salutatory oration is the second on the program. Tuesday.

The College Young Men's Christian association has elected the following delegates to the summer lake conference: To Northfield, Mass., T. S. Talley and W. E. Hartshorne; to Lake Geneva, Wis., H. C. Cooper, E. K. Gay, Leonard and H. J. Benson. This delegation is the largest sent by any college association in the State.

The next issue of the Collegian will be a handsome Commencement number. It has just appeared. The cover will be treated in the College colors, black and gold, and the literary matter will be unique and interesting. It will contain also a number of engravings made from photographs of the College buildings, the Senior class, the football team, etc. The paper will be issued between the 15th and 20th of this month. The price is single copies, 15 cents, and they may be ordered of Mr. H. J. Olmstead. Three hundred copies have already been sold at the College.

Examinations ended yesterday at 1 p. m., and commencement week is all that remains of the college year 1892-93. As the president remarked Monday morning at chapel, the year has been one of advance along all lines. The classes have been larger, and the students have done better work. Next week five will be graduated from the College and nine from the Academy. With the building of the Coburn library and the Wolcott observatory, the securing of the [illegible] the subsequent erection of a science building, Colorado College will surely take its place as the foremost institution of learning in the Rocky Mountain region.
